

law profession. On this measure, Mr. Estrada fails to convince us that he would contribute under-represented perspectives to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

As stated by Mr. Estrada during his meeting with us, he has never provided any pro bono legal expertise to the Latino community or organizations. Nor has he ever joined, supported, volunteered for or participated in events of any organization dedicated to serving and advancing the Latino community. As an attorney working in government and the private sector, he has never made efforts to open doors of opportunity to Latino law students or junior lawyers through internships, mentoring or other means. While he has not been in the position to create internships or recruit new staff, he never appealed to his superiors about the importance of making such efforts on behalf of Latinos. Furthermore, Mr. Estrada declined to commit that he would be engaged in Hispanic community activities once appointed to the bench or that he would pro-actively seek to promote increased access to positions where Latinos have been traditionally under-represented, such as clerkships.

Mr. Estrada shared with us that he believes being Hispanic would be irrelevant in his day-to-day duties on the court, which leads us to conclude that he does not see himself as being capable of bringing new perspectives to the bench. This is deeply troubling since the CHC's primary objective in increasing ethnic diversity of the courts is to increase the presence of under-represented perspectives.

Mr. Estrada's limited record makes it difficult to determine whether he would be a forceful voice on the bench for advancing civil rights and other protections for minorities. He has never served as a judge and has not written any substantive articles or publications. However, we did note that in responding to inquiries about case law, Mr. Estrada did not demonstrate a sense of inherent "unfairness" or "justice" in cases that have had a great impact on the Hispanic community.

The appointment of a Latino to reflect diversity is rendered meaningless unless the nominee can demonstrate an understanding of the historical role courts have played in the lives of minorities in extending equal protections and rights; has some involvement in the Latino community that provides insight into the values and mores of the Latino culture in order to understand the unique legal challenges facing Latinos; and recognizes both the role model responsibilities he or she assumes as well as having an appreciation for protecting and promoting the legal rights of minorities who historically have been the victims of discrimination.

Based on the totality of the nominee's available record and our meeting with him, Miguel Estrada fails to meet the CHC's criteria for endorsing a judicial nominee. In our opinion, his lack of judicial experience coupled with a failure to recognize or display an interest in the needs of the Hispanic community do not support an appointment to the federal judiciary. We respectfully urge you to take this into account as you consider his nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

Sincerely,

SILVESTRE REYES,
Chair, Congressional Hispanic Caucus.

CHARLES A. GONZALEZ,
Chair, CHC Civil Rights Task Force.

Mr. REID. And I say that the final two sentences of this letter be read:

In our opinion, his lack of judicial experience coupled with a failure to recognize or display an interest in the needs of the Hispanic community do not support an appointment to the federal judiciary.

The Hispanic caucus unanimously opposed the nomination.

Mr. HATCH. I cannot let that go. If they are saying because he lacks judicial experience he should not be on the court—which is what it appears to me they are saying—they are just condemning almost every nonjudge Hispanic to never have a chance to be a Federal district or circuit court of appeals judge. That is ridiculous. Every Democrat President I have served with—President Carter and President Clinton—have appointed a wide variety of people who never served on the bench but who are highly qualified and are doing a good job as judges now.

It may be helpful to have some judicial experience, but not having judicial experience does not mean you cannot serve. If that were the case, some of the greatest judges in the history of the world would never have had a chance.

But if you interpret what they say, that means that any Hispanic who has not had judicial experience really should not be supported. That is ridiculous. That is caving in to the liberal special interest groups in this town with which they continually spend time, and is to the detriment of the Hispanic community. I say that as a chairman of the Republican senatorial Hispanic task force who has worked for the last 13 years to try to solve these problems.

I don't take second seat to anyone with regard to my love for the Hispanic community or my work on their behalf.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. HATCH. We have had enough debate. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period of morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO DANNY PELHAM

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, on Monday, I had the chance to visit with Danny Pelham. He came to my office, and we reflected on his nearly 35 years of service to the Senate.

As he walked out, I heard a member of my staff say: "There goes the wisest man I know." I couldn't agree more.

Danny arrived in the Senate on March 25, 1968. In his time here, he has seen the making of Senate history, and American history, and he has seen 237 Senators come and go.

Through it all, Daniel Pehlman conducted himself with utter fairness, thoroughness, and discretion. It makes sense that—in his off hours—he is a basketball official.

For 35 years, he has walked the halls of power, but he never let it distort his perspective, or his sense of what is truly important. If you have ever seen him with his grandson Corey, or heard him talk about his wife Phyllis, you begin to understand that.

Ralph Waldo Emerson wrote: "we put our love where we have put our labor." For 35 years, Danny labored for—and loved—the Senate. It is fitting that we adopt this resolution expressing our appreciation—and love—for Danny Pelham.

MEDICAID REFORM

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I want to speak for just a few minutes on the Senate floor about the proposal made last Friday by the Bush administration regarding Medicaid. The proposal was a disturbing one, in my view. It was to reform the Medicaid program by shifting to a block grant to the States. That is a recycled proposal, one we have seen before. It was touted, when described last Friday, as giving the States flexibility. It would give them flexibility.

It would give them flexibility to drop benefits to low-income children, to drop benefits to pregnant women, to people with disabilities, and to the elderly. And it would give them flexibility to dramatically increase the cost sharing for those vulnerable populations. With over 41 million Americans who are currently uninsured, in my view, we should be trying to find ways to expand health coverage rather than finding new ways to reduce it.

Unfortunately, the proposal allows States to continue Medicaid as it is or to convert the program into a block grant. This was tried in 1981 and again in 1996. The administration would encourage States to take the latter option; that is, to move to receipt of a block grant by encouragement of being temporarily offered increased dollars. That would be coupled with this offer of added flexibility to be able to reduce the benefits for their Medicaid beneficiaries and increase the costs being charged to those low-income and vulnerable populations. Secretary Thompson notes the proposal would clearly save the States money. This would only happen if the States decided to do what would almost certainly occur; that is, to cut benefits and increase cost sharing.

Also, this proposal takes the Federal Government off the hook for helping States address their uninsured problems because under the proposal there would be no additional Federal money available to States if they attempted to expand coverage in the future. In order to expand coverage, the only option States would have would be to essentially rob Peter to pay Paul. In
